EXPEDITION TEAM SCOUTING REPORTS

Seabourn Venture and Seabourn Pursuit in Paradise Bay, Antarctica

Antarctica

- In November, our two expedition ships, Seabourn Venture and Seabourn Pursuit, had a chance to meet in Antarctica and say hello to each other. The nearly identical vessels looked beautiful in the calm blue setting, and guests enjoyed Champagne and canapés on deck to commemorate the occasion.
- Earlier that day, Seabourn Venture enjoyed a landing at Neko Harbour in the serene Andvord Bay. The harbor is home not just to beautiful glaciers and mountains, but also to a couple thousand gentoo penguins who congregate in a large colony.

The Arctic

- On a recent visit to Isfjord in Northeast Greenland National Park, some guests embarked on a kayak excursion along the eastern side of the four-mile-wide fjord, which was draped in morning sun. The waters were perfectly calm, and guests enjoyed exploring the ice and scenery as they paddled along, glancing up at the glaucous gulls overhead.
- Upon our return, the ship was preparing for the famous polar plunge. As ever, there are a lot of bragging rights about having done the plunge, but judging by the expressions as guests scrambled back to the ladder, the water was quite cold. However, some brave souls did the plunge more than once — earning cheers from the gallery of guests above.

Kayaking Northeast Greenland National Park

Orongo Village, Easter Island

South Pacific

- Easter Island's mysterious moai are iconic, but few know of the Birdman Cult that followed. With two full days on the island, we will be able to fully dive into its fascinating history at the remains in Orongo village. Legend has it that elders would choose competitors to leap from the sheer cliffs into the waters below in search of sooty tern eggs. The first of the fearless swimmers to return safely would secure a year of rule for their leader.

Saltwater Crocodile

The Kimberley

- No visit to The Kimberley is complete without a saltwater crocodile sighting, and we've seen plenty in recent scouting trips along the King George and Hunter rivers. The massive creatures can reach lengths of more than 23 feet and can weigh over 2,200 pounds!

A QUICK NOTE FROM ROBIN WEST

As we wrap up another incredible season in Antarctica and South America, we're looking forward to what lies ahead, including Seabourn Pursuit's inaugural voyages in the South Pacific and The Kimberley, and Seabourn Venture's return to the Arctic. I hope to see you on board and find out what unexpected Seabourn Moment is awaiting you. —Robin

VOYAGE REPORT: NORTHWEST PASSAGE 2024

- Our last voyage through the Northwest Passage was nothing short of stellar. From sampling locally sourced caribou and Arctic char in Cambridge Bay to watching a phalanx of bowhead whales see us through the Bellot Strait, there was something magical about each day. In Coningham Bay, we saw from the ship no fewer than 10 polar bears over the course of several hours.
- It's difficult to put into words the isolation and vastness of this wild region. Its remote beauty finds new ways to astound us every time we visit. We hope you are able to join us in 2025 to experience it for yourself.

“This is our 3rd cruise on Seabourn Venture this year! Each experience has been remarkable, unforgettable, and truly unique!”

— Cynthia N.

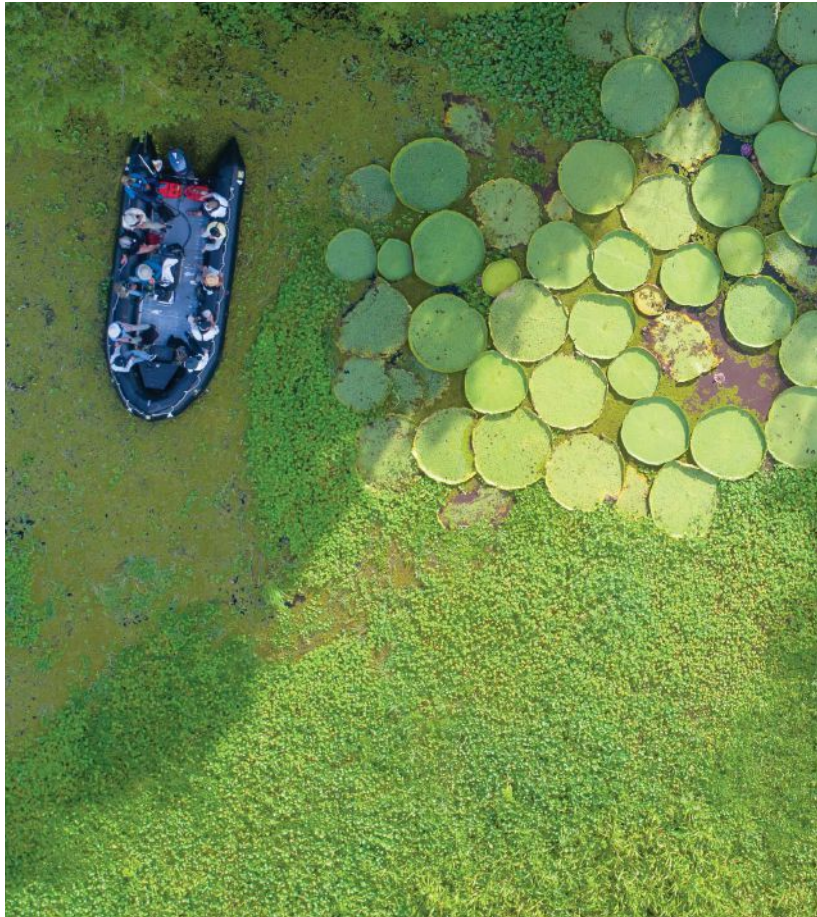

“This is our first cruise ever. I see why people love going on cruises and I see why people love Seabourn because the crew they know you, they say hello to you by name, which to me is so impressive given how many people there are on board. But that was also something we liked about the small size of this ship, and we wanted a smaller cruising experience and we’re really enjoying it.”

— David & Julie,
on board Seabourn Venture

“I love the fact that we can come back from a day of adventure in the Zodiacs or walking on land, seeing the penguins and wildlife. And sometimes it’s very cold and we come back to the comfort of the ship, and we have a delicious dinner and meet with our friends and have cocktails and beautiful entertainment. It’s definitely a five-star, six-star resort that takes you around the world to these great adventures.”
